Biosocial criminology examines the biological basis of criminal behavior and the role of both environmental and biological influences on this behavior. The goal of this course is to educate the students on the current research of biosocial criminology, help the students develop their own perspectives on these issues, and to encourage students to apply their knowledge to their community.