In support of our students and employees during the COVID-19 pandemic, the Department of Performing Arts office is closed until further notice. Classes are continuing online. Students should contact their instructors first if they have questions about a class. The DPA faculty wants to thank our students for their ability and persistence as we transition to online instruction. We always knew performing arts students were flexible thinkers, and this crisis is reminding us how true that is—our students are the best! We appreciate student willingness to change, and we want to assure you it is temporary. The performing arts can bring humanity to the online world, but they are best studied and experienced when faculty and students can share a space and have the kind of exchange that makes the arts so important and impactful in our society, and in our hearts, minds, and lives. Rest assured, we will all be back together!

The Browning Center building (where the Department of Performing Arts is located) is also closed until further notice. If you need assistance or have questions about the facility or events, you can contact the Browning Center at browningcenter@weber.edu.

While the physical office and our building may be closed, we are still here to help. Please email the department secretary, Patty Coan, for any assistance you might need. We will continue to be regularly staffed (just virtually).

When there are substantial changes in the current situation that affect DPA, we will be sure to post them here.

Need advising? You can contact the Lindquist College of Arts and Humanities advisors for appointments and questions:

To schedule an online or phone appointment - cahadvisor.youcanbook.me

For "quick" questions, email at - cahadvisor@weber.edu