Faculty Report	VII Dr. Colleen Packer reported that Faculty Senate is working on curriculum changes, salary and assessment issues. She then introduced Dr. John Mbaku, Professor of Economics. Dr. Mbaku informed the Board that since he graduated from the University of Georgia he has been working on corruption in the government in Africa, he has written 13 books on the development of Africa and mentored a lot of young scholars. In 2000 he got a request from an organization in Kenya to make sure that students who go to school in Africa to study economics were getting the same kind of training as in other places in the world. Instead of giving scholarships for students to study in Europe or America, they wanted students to get an equal education by staying in Africa. Economists from around the world were recruited to go twice a year to Africa and meet with students in their last years of training for a Master's degree. They would look at dissertations and make sure they equal what would be required in other places. Dr. Mbaku visited 26 universities in 2006, making sure they have appropriate instruction for PhD programs. Over the years, approximately 4,000 economists have been trained and most of them now work in universities in Africa. Dr. Mbaku has consulted with governments of Kenya, Uganda and South Sudan and written papers on how to deal with natural resources and promotion of the rule of law. He met with Somalia officials on a plan for transition into a stable government. Dr. Mbaku thanked Weber State University for giving him the platform to do all these things in Africa.

Chair Alan Hall asked Dr. Mbaku if there was interest in entrepreneurship in Africa. Dr. Mbaku responded that most people in Africa want free trade and enterprise, but institutions are so bad that it's very difficult to run a business. They are trying to promote discussion of the governments changing institutions to make it easier to start and run businesses. Women need to have more access to banking credit. Women aren't allowed to own land so they don't have access to credit because they have no collateral.

Steve Starks asked Dr. Mbaku if he tracked any of the great students from WSU of African heritage. Dr. Mbaku said that he had met some of them in Africa, but he didn't know of any program to track them.

Dr. Kathryn Lindquist asked if micro-loans for women were making much of a difference. Dr. Mbaku said that micro-lending programs in Uganda and parts of eastern Africa have been very successful, especially among women. He added that micro-lending only goes so far and that once you grow your business to a certain point you need to have access to credit. The micro-lending programs in Somalia haven't been very successful because due to the fighting there the people don't have permanent addresses for the most part.

President Millner asked Dr. Mbaku about the Chinese influence in Africa in natural resources. Dr. Mbaku replied that the Chinese are doing a lot of work in Africa. The Chinese have informed their hosts that they're not interested in human rights. Europeans try to monitor investments to make sure it doesn't influence negatively, but the Chinese don't do that. In addition, the Chinese are not interested in building permanent structures in Africa. They build structures just good enough to allow them to exploit the resources and the environment they leave behind isn't conducive to people living there. The Chinese say the country is in charge of taking care of the environment.
